Chapter 1 by Adsy

"It was a dark and stormy night..."

I can't write that, I thought to myself as my writer's block hit me once again like a Nerf bullet to the eye. Wait, was that a Nerf bullet in my eye or my headache returning? No, I just shot myself in the eye with my mini Nerf gun trying to write this darn story.

A lesser man would simply give up, turn the monitor off, shut the laptop down, walk away and not finish. Unfortunately for me I don't have that luxury.

Here I am, a 3yr old boy with the mind of a 20 year old intellectual man trying to hide my talents from my parents. Why am I doing this you might ask? Because they don't get it is why. The last time I tried to show them how smart I was, well, let me just tell you what happened.

I woke up one day and instantly I knew. I didn't know anything in particular per se, but I knew me. I knew I was alive, a person, a living breathing human capable of anything. Well, not really anything. I still haven't worked out how to fly, but

What I knew though was that I was different. I was different to every other 2 day old baby, but mentally, I could hear my mother talking to dad about when they were wanting to leave the hospital. I wanted to leave now, so I told them that.

Well shit, I don't know if I said the wrong thing, or if it was the way I said it, hut holy crap did it create a scene. Three things happened at once. Mum got a look of shock and then passed out, dad started choking on the sandwich he was eating and the nurse who had just walked into the room screamed.

My bad.
